845 MILLION FRIENDS AND COUNTING ...

Why a public Facebook would be such a big deal

Facebook filed to raise a targeted $5 billion in a hotly anticipated initial public offering this week, setting the stage for Silicon Valley's largest-ever IPO. The world's largest social network, a dorm room project for Harvard dropout Mark Zuckerberg that exploded in popularity and vaulted to Silicon Valley's top tier within eight years, is all about the numbers. Here's a look at a few of them, along with other tidbits. REUTERS

New commercials? Bueller? Bueller?

Scott Bolohan
» redeye@tribune.com

Dude No. 1: “Oh man, check it out! A ‘Ferris Bueller’ commercial!”

Dude No. 2: “That’s so six days ago.”

This isn’t an ad for a phone. It’s a conversation that probably will happen Sunday during the Super Bowl.

As a sporting event, the Super Bowl isn’t all that great. I can’t even tell you who won two years ago. But it’s the biggest TV event in our country—and a huge part of it is the ads. According to Nielsen, more people watch the game for the commercials than the actual football/Madonna lip-synching.

So with companies releasing their ads online days before the game even kicks off, they’re taking the fun out of the experience. (Granted, this is probably the biggest First World Problem ever.)

Sure, we’ll still have tons of food, many opportunities to place irresponsible bets and copious reasons to make hilarious Eli Manning faces. But the Super Bowl always has been more about one giant shared American experience, something so rare now.

When a truly great Super Bowl commercial came on a couple of years ago, everyone would stop and watch. And you know how things are funnier when you are laughing with other people because they’re laughing too? That always happened at Super Bowls.

The next day everyone would dissect his or her favorite commercials around the 21st century equivalent of the water cooler (the line at Starbucks?), debating which was the funniest, who cried during the Google commercial ... things like that. It was a truly shared experience. Now it sort of feels like someone spoiled that Darth Vader was Luke’s father or Bruce Willis was dead the whole time.

For advertisers trying to get the most out of their $3.5 million, it makes sense. But it comes at the expense of taking away from one of the greatest days of the year.

Too often entertainment is experienced individually, which in some ways is great. You can watch pretty much on your computer while wearing sweatpants. But in many ways culture is now so individualized it’s like everyone has his own set of headphones plugged into a device carrying everything that could possibly be deemed interesting (which is probably true).

Because so much entertainment is leaked online before the release date, there are few moments left in which people feel like they’re all experiencing it at the same time. If I heard there was going to be a “Ferris Bueller” or Jerry Seinfeld and Soup Nazi ad, I would have been legitimately excited (until the Jay Leno part at least). But now that I and pretty much everyone I know has already seen them, it will actually make them airing during the Super Bowl disappointing, realizing it could have been a good moment but it already happened.

Life moves pretty fast. If you don’t stop and look around once in a while, you could miss it. Being able to stop and share a moment with people is pretty important too.

SCOTT BOLOHAN IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

STICK IT TO 'EM

The design for the first Chicago vehicle sticker with Mayor Emanuel's name on it was revealed Thursday. The new 2012-13 sticker, which will go on sale in late spring or early summer, was designed by Herbert Pulgar (left), a Lawrence Hall Youth Services freshman. It features a heart enclosing the city skyline and Chicago's flag with outstretched hands, and police, firefighter and paramedic symbols and hats. The sticker's cost, which went up this year, is $85 for a passenger car and $135 for a car heavier than 4,500 pounds. The new prices went into effect Jan. 1. TRIBUNE

Investigators continue to receive tips four years after Lane Bryant killings

Chicago Tribune

Five heart-shaped red balloons floated silently away over a vacant storefront in Tinley Park on Thursday in memory of the lives lost four years ago in one of the south suburbs' most infamous crimes.

Family members came to remember the five women who were shot and killed inside the Lane Bryant women's clothing store on Feb. 2, 2008, when a gunman entered about 10 a.m. while posing as a deliveryman.

He announced he was robbing the store and bound six women with duct tape in a back room. About 45 minutes later, police arrived to find five of them had been killed, shot execution-style. One woman survived with a graze wound to the neck.

Killed were Jennifer Bishop, 34, of South Bend, Ind.; store manager Rhoda McFarland, 42, of Joliet; Sarah Szafranski, 22, of Oak Forest; Connie Woolfolk, 37, of Flossmoor; and Carrie Hudek Chiuso, 33, of Frankfort.

Relatives of Bishop, McFarland and Szafranski met one another outside the store Thursday morning. Bishop's sister, Michele Talos, drove from South Bend with two of her best friends to remember the victims for family members who couldn't attend Thursday.

"I feel like I want to come for them too, because I know we're all praying for each other and thinking of each other all the time," Talos said.

Despite the lack of promising leads in the crime's investigation, Talos said she still hopes justice will be served. At the same time, she fears the gunman's arrest because of what it would mean for her sister's three children, now ages 11, 9 and 4.

"I don't want them to be older and have to sit through a trial and live through what this day was four years ago," she said.

Tinley Park police Cmdr. Pat McCain said 137 tips related to the case came in during 2011, pushing the total to 6,602. Four full-time investigators are working on the case.

Officers have followed tips to Texas, London and North Carolina, and they continue to comb through cellphone records of calls made in the area on the day of the shooting for possible connections.

“I know there's somebody out there who knows who did this. I feel they'll come forward. That, linked with the advancement in forensics, I think the time will come.” —Tinley Park police Cmdr. Pat McCain, on the Lane Bryant killings

Wrigley Field patio plan clears hurdle

Chicago Tribune

The Landmark Illinois permit review committee on Thursday approved plans by the owners of the Cubs to make changes to the right-field bleachers at Wrigley Field.

The team's plans call for construction of a patio and the installation of a 75-foot-wide and 7-foot-high LED sign in right field. The sign will flash game statistics and advertising, city officials said.

Committee members urged the Cubs to submit a long-range plan for signs at the ballpark.

"We want to know, what's the big picture?" said Ald. Mary Ann Smith (48th), a member of the permit review committee. "Wrigley Field is a treasure to that neighborhood."

Separately, the commission unanimously approved a recommendation to give landmark status to the Wrigley Building on Michigan Avenue, a move preservation advocates say is long overdue.

"The Wrigley Building is one of Chicago's premier downtown buildings and internationally known as one of the greatest designs of legendary Chicago architecture," said Lisa DiChiera, director of advocacy for the non-profit Landmark Illinois organization. "Most people are shocked to learn that this iconic building was not already designated as an official Chicago Landmark long ago."

Komen group denies anti-abortion pressure

4 WASHINGTON Breast cancer charity Susan G. Komen for the Cure on Thursday denied political pressure from anti-abortion groups had anything to do with its decision to cut off funding for the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, trying to contain a crisis between the two leading women's health groups.

In a 3 1/2-minute video statement posted on its website and YouTube, the Komen foundation said critics have mischaracterized its decision to deny new money to Planned Parenthood and warned the controversy could distract attention from the struggle against breast cancer.

"We will never bow to political pressure," Komen founder Nancy Brinker said in the video.

"The scurrilous accusations being hurled at this organization are profoundly hurtful to so many of us," she said. "But more importantly, they are a dangerous distraction from the work that still remains to be done in ridding the world of breast cancer."

The Komen foundation, known for its pink ribbon symbol and Race for the Cure fundraisers, has collected more than $1.9 billion for breast cancer research and programs. It has affiliates in more than 100 U.S. cities and 50 countries.

Planned Parenthood provides abortion, birth control and other health services to women. It had received about $700,000 annually from Komen to provide access to mammograms for low-income women.

Brinker said the funding change reflects a new internal

CHICAGO RESPONSE

"With regards to our Facebook strategy, we are continuing to keep our fans up to speed on a regular basis and allowing all comments that do not contain any profanity to remain visible on the wall," Michael Ziener, executive director of the Chicago branch of Susan G. strategy aimed at using donation money more effectively by eliminating duplicate grants and tightening eligibility rules.

That includes withholding funding from a group under investigation by U.S. authorities. Republican lawmaker Cliff Stearns is probing Planned Parenthood over its use of taxpayer funds.

"Regrettably, this strategic shift will affect any number of long-standing partners. But we have always done what is right for our organization, for our donors and volunteers," Brinker said.

Bad plays. Penalties. Questionable calls.

Expect former Bears players Jerry Azumah, who has retired from the NFL, and Chris Harris, who is now with the Detroit Lions, to be tweeting about it all from their phones during the Super Bowl. They're just a couple of the voices on Twitter who will share their opinions during the game.

"I just kind of go with the flow. If something comes up, I'll tweet about it," said Azumah, who will be in Indianapolis during Super Bowl XLVI.

His followers will see him tweet more about the play itself than players who don't make the cut. "With my Twitter, I'm not all the way out there in terms of really voicing my opinion," he said. "For instance, if a guy makes a bad play, I'm not going to curse him out."

Azumah and Harris have a combined total of more than 54,000 Twitter followers. (Harris leads with 38,600.)

"Sometimes I like creating and stirring up a little controversy every once in a while," Harris said. "I'm aware of everything I tweet whether it'd be good or bad, controversial or not."

"I'm a smart tweeter. I'm aware of everything, of all my possible ramifications and possible backlash and things of that nature. I'm aware of that when I put a tweet out. So I think about it first and if I want to deal with it or if I want to stir up controversy, I'll press send. If not, then I'll leave it alone."

Watching the Super Bowl on TV is 5000 old school. Now more than ever there are virtual ways to enjoy the big game. Here are a few notable ones. L.V.

Mouse trap: Watch the Super Bowl with a click of the mouse. For the first time, the game will be streamed online at nbcsports.com and nfl.com. More camera angles, high-definition video, game highlights, live stats and replays will be featured.

Commercial central: Fans can watch, rate and share commercials in the USA Today Facebook Super Bowl Ad Meter, a new partnership this year for USA Today and Facebook. YouTube and Hulu offer similar options with their AdBlitz and AdZone operations.

SUPER BOWL NIGHT WATCH

HEY, SPOILERS! SOME OF US WON'T CATCH THE BIG GAME LIVE

By Leonor Vivanco

REDEYE

Get ready to fill up on wings, guzzle some beers and slap a few high-fives. Super Bowl Sunday is approaching.

It's undoubtedly the biggest TV event of the year—the 2011 game set a record for the most-watched U.S. program of all time, according to The Nielsen Company—but not everyone will be on the couch for the showdown between the New England Patriots and New York Giants on Sunday afternoon. Consider the plight of restaurant workers, airline travelers and football followers otherwise unable to watch it as it unfolds. RedEye checked in with such unlucky fans to see how they plan to take in the main event.

Inside a hot, tiny kitchen at Ian's Pizza in Wrigleyville, cooks will be craning their necks and straining their eyes to see any game action. The Clark Street pizza spot has one small TV mounted above a register so customers can watch the game, but the cooks have to catch a play in the reflection of the TV in the windows.

"That's the one day we have that turned up all the way," manager Mike Wood said. They'll also rely on regular dispatches from people out front, he said.

Still, workers won't have much time to take in the game during crunch time Sunday: typically before kickoff and at halftime. That's when party hosts are most likely to order pizzas and bargoers are to come in for a slice.

The scene at Ian's plays out in similar ways at bars and restaurants across the country. Food industry workers collectively will be filling orders for 48 million Americans who are expected to get takeout.

Another 12 million customers are predicted to watch the game at a restaurant or bar, according to The National Restaurant Association.

As far as the delivery drivers, Wood said, they have it easy: "They're in the car and can turn on their radio."

Who else might have a tough time catching the game? Airline travelers, who for the most part are out of range to catch televised or online updates, unless they're at the airport bar or flying with a company that provides live TV or an Internet connection.

Southwest Airlines, for example, is equipped with WiFi so passengers can get updates from their electronic devices. And pilots have been known to update travelers during sporting events such as the Super Bowl, according to a spokeswoman for the airline.

New York-based airline JetBlue offers fliers live TV on individual seat-back screens. The airline plans to celebrate the Super Bowl with $1 alcoholic drinks during game time and free buffalo wing pretzel snacks.

Other globe-trotting fans might not have that luxury.

John Enos of Rogers Park will be out at sea on a four-day singles cruise to Mexico and Key West. He has no idea if the cruise ship will have Internet or WiFi so he can at least check the score online.

"If they have a TV showing the game at a bar on the ship, I'll be watching it if I can," said Enos, 47, an Internet technology administrator.

Just in case, he plans to DVR the game so he can watch it when he returns Monday. "Knowing my luck, I'll miss it and it'll be the greatest game ever and go into overtime," he said.

If he wasn't on the cruise, he said he'd be hosting a Super Bowl party, grilling food and snacking on his chili dip. But he had a "total brain freeze" when he booked his first cruise in November.

"I didn't even stop and look at the calendar," he said. "I would have been really upset if it was the Bears."

There's an app for that: Verizon customers can download the free NFL Mobile app, which will stream the big game on smartphones for the first time. The app, available at iTunes and Android Marketplace, gives real-time scores, sends text alerts and plays live audio of the game. A $3 fee applies to phone owners without Verizon Wireless 4G LTE smartphones.

Be social: Follow former and current football players active on Twitter for colorful game commentary: former Bears cornerback Jerry Azumah (@jerryazumah), Bears kicker Robbie Gould (@robbiegould09) and former Bears safety Chris Harris (@chrisharrisnfl) are just a few to consider.

Mad about football: "Madden NFL," the EA Sports video game, has correctly picked the Super Bowl winner in six of the past eight years in simulated games. This year the computer picked the N.Y. Giants over New England, 27-24.

BOWL OF TREATS

WHIZZER MAKES HIS SUPER BOWL PREDICTIONS

By Whizzer

Super Bowl Sunday is one of my favorite days of the year. There's football. There are celebrities. There are funny commercials. There's beer—uh, I mean, water. There's food.

Ahhhh, the food. Among canines, Super Bowl Sunday is among the top table-scrap days of the year, right behind Thanksgiving and that day our humans trip over us after retrieving the pizza from the deliveryman. I didn't mean to be right under your feet, no sir.

The real reason for Super Sunday, of course, is the NFL's title game. This year, we get a treat: the New York Giants vs. the New England Patriots. A rematch of the 2008 game.

And a rematch of a game played earlier this season. I'll let you decide if that's a good or bad thing.

What I will do, though, is make some predictions for Sunday's matchup. You will too, if you are brave enough to challenge me via text. Here's where I remind you I correctly predicted who'd reach the Super Bowl a few weeks ago. Scared yet? Anyway, let's have at it. Here now, my Super Bowl picks.

THE GAME

The Giants beat the Patriots once already this season, 24-20 in Week 9. Eli Manning was the hero, hitting tight end Jake Ballard with a touchdown pass with 15 seconds left in the game. Sunday's game won't come down to the final seconds. Although I'll be getting seconds—and hopefully thirds and fourths.

WHIZZER'S PREDICTION:
Giants 34, Patriots 24

THE MVP

This award is generally reserved for the quarterback, but I'm going out on a limb this year. I'm giving it to Victor Cruz, the breakout receiver who celebrates his touchdowns by doing a salsa dance. Mmmmm, salsa ...

THE GOAT

Tom Brady, time for you to toil among mere mortals. Yes, I'm seeing a key interception late in the game when your Patriots were driving for at least a tying field goal. Sorry, bro. Maybe Gisele can console you.

THE WHIZZER CHALLENGE

Can you beat Whizzer's picks? He doesn't think so, but give it a shot. Text "whizzer" followed by your playoff predictions to 87708. Include your name so Whizzer can give you shoutout.

THAT'S SUPER

From news services

Report: Manning cleared to play

Oh, the drama! The saga of Peyton Manning and the Indianapolis Colts took another turn Thursday as the city he calls home prepares for Sunday's Super Bowl. According to ESPN, the longtime Colts quarterback—and older brother of N.Y. Giants quarterback Eli—has been medically cleared to resume his NFL career by two doctors, including the surgeon who performed the recent surgery on the quarterback's neck. Poor Eli. Even when he's in the Super Bowl, he's upstaged by his brother.

Brady is a bad boy

New England quarterback Tom Brady did something naughty last year during the Super Bowl. And it did not involve wife Gisele Bündchen. In a news conference Thursday, Brady admitted he watched the Super Bowl last year via an illegal stream online. "Last year I was rehabbing my foot in Costa Rica watching the game on an illegal Super Bowl website and now I'm actually playing in the game, so it's pretty cool," Brady said. On Sunday the game will be streamed—legally—for the first time ever on nbc.com.

Tebow has the touch

Denver Broncos quarterback Tim Tebow isn't playing in the Super Bowl, but he's in Indianapolis promoting EA Sports. He was a big hit with the radio people. "Actually, I'm a pretty relaxed person and don't love too much attention," Tebow said, according to Yahoo! Sports. "Sometimes I'd love just go to dinner and relax with my friends and family and just be a normal kid, but it's hard to do ... though the pros definitely outweigh the cons because I can go into a hospital and share time with kids."

THE MOUTHWATCH

"When I flew in here Sunday night and saw downtown and all the things they had going on, it just made me really proud of Indianapolis and central Indiana and what they've done. I think people are going to really, really enjoy their time at this Super Bowl."

—NBC football analyst and former Indianapolis Colts coach Tony Dungy

GO NUTS!

SETTLING SPORTS-BASED ARGUMENTS ONE DEBATE AT A TIME

Setup: The Hawks game started late because of bad weather. You want to beat the traffic getting home from Soldier Field. The Bulls are crushing their opponent. There are reasons to consider leaving a game early, but should you?

This round: Is it acceptable to leave a game early?

If it was my choice to purchase tickets to a sporting event, it's also my choice to leave early. Maybe I didn't dress warmly enough for a winter football game, I ran out of beer money or my team is losing so badly that I cannot stomach hearing my friends complain any longer, but if I'm no longer enjoying myself for any reason, I reserve the right to leave before the clock winds down to zero.

Let me get this straight. You, as a fan, would plan your day around a sporting event just to leave early? I'll set aside the issue of disrespecting your wallet and simply say this: You know that deafening roar you hear while waiting for the "L" or walking to your car before the final whistle, horn or strike? That's the sound of your team making a spectacular comeback—and you missed it to save a few minutes on your trip home. Are you prepared to live with that kind of regret? I'm not.

Character, not characters. I see the Bears stunned no one and went with Phil Emery as their new general manager. Oh, I can see why. Look at these stunning credentials: Character. Hard-working. Honesty. Integrity. Hardworking. Character. Yeah, OK. I'm really sick of that guy. Sound familiar?

Here are others who had those traits: Dave Wannstedt, Dick Jauron, Mark Hatley, Jerry Angelo, Jack Pardee, Neill Armstrong, Abe Gibron and Jim Dooley.

I'd rather have the guy nobody likes but will kick some tail (yes, that's Mike Ditka. Sorry, he lives). And George Halas himself, back in the day.

Now from the morgue in Lake Forest we get the goody-goodyies. Ted Phillips, George McCaskey and this guy.

But Emery, you alone can make it up to me. You said "this is a big man's game," so I'm assuming no more midgets like Garrett Wolfe. Yay!

You can be a big man yourself and sign receiver Vincent Jackson. He's big. Do the thing Lovie did a few years back and fly the guy here yourself if you have to.

Beyond that, I'll be watching a real football family, the Maras, as they prepare to meet New England. I'll never understand how the Giants got the Maras, the Steelers got the Rooneys and we got these people. Heck, the Packers don't even have owners. The town owns them! Maybe we can have something like that!

I'm dreaming. I'm also dreaming the Bulls aren't going to the NBA Finals. They can't beat the Heat. And getting Joel Przybilla (career: four points a game) won't help.

This irks me: Joakim Noah says the $60 million deal "hurt his game." Unless you spent it, we'll take some back. Sheesh.

And now I'm really worried about the Blackhawks. Losing is happening a lot, brutal trip ahead and no one is stepping up.

I'd look toward spring training, but there's nothing there either.

Harry leaves Hogwarts behind

St. Louis Post-Dispatch

As the boy wizard in a billion-dollar movie franchise, Daniel Radcliffe grew up before fans' eyes. But a decade after entering Hogwarts, the actor, now 22, has graduated from Harry Potter to adult roles.

Most notably, he starred in a stage production of "Equus" in his native London and New York for which he flashed his physique. Soon he'll begin work on "Kill Your Darlings," a true-life murder story in which he co-stars as poet Allen Ginsberg. His Gothic horror movie "The Woman in Black" opens Friday.

Radcliffe spoke by phone from New York, where he was completing a successful run on Broadway in the musical "How to Succeed in Business (Without Really Trying)."

Although this movie is your first adult role, it isn't the first time you've worn Victorian garb. When are you going to do a whole movie in blue jeans?

I know! I hope that at some point in my life, I'll do something contemporary. But I'm not complaining, because I love that steampunk aesthetic and those old costumes. If I could wear them every day without getting beat up, I would.

And you must enjoy exploring haunted mansions.

Indeed. The new movie is a supernatural thriller about a young lawyer whose wife died in childbirth and left him to care for their young son. He is sent to a foggy estate to handle the affairs of a recently deceased woman and is made the target of a very angry ghost. It's pretty frightening, but it was great fun to make, actually.

There are a lot of old dolls in this mansion. Did they give you the creeps?

I'm not afraid of old dolls individually, but antique dolls en masse are very creepy. Especially when they move about.

You've been making movies since you were a child, so when you watch movies as a consumer, can you still be scared by them, or do you notice all the tricks?

When I first start making films, I was obsessed with how special effects were achieved. I remember watching the brilliant opening battle sequence of "Gladiator" and thinking: That must have taken ages to make, and a lot of money. But now I can just sit back and enjoy things like everyone else.

Now that the Potter series is over, do you have more time for your own amusements?

Not really. After the last Potter film, I had about a month and a half break, but I spent it preparing for this film and for my role [on Broadway] in "How to Succeed in Business." I've always found time to go to the cinema, but I literally cannot remember the last time I was able to go to a club and see a band, although I've been to the Reading music festival several times.

Have you gotten to travel much?

Last year for my birthday I spent a week in Russia, which is a country I always wanted to visit. But I'm not interested in going to hot countries and just laying on the beach. I don't know how to relax, and I don't particularly enjoy it when people try to make me. If I'm going to travel, I'd rather do it for work. My favorite claim to fame is that I was the first Western actor to attend a film premiere in communist China, for the second Potter movie.

When you're out in public, does it still astonish you to see your own image on billboards or magazine covers?

I'm used to it by now, but I do enjoy the effect that it has on other people. A fellow from "How to Succeed" went on holiday in the Caribbean and he said that the first thing he saw when he got to the hotel was a cardboard cutout of me. And I thought: Welcome to my world.

The Woman in Black

If it looks like a haunted house and sounds like a haunted house, it is probably a haunted house.

Yet the ominously remote location and eerie appearance that practically includes a sign reading "Stay away, you fool!" aren't enough to deter Arthur Kipps (Daniel "Harry Potter" Radcliffe), a young lawyer sent to finalize some paperwork and deliver on one last chance to save his job. Obviously Kipps has little faith in his employment prospects; the more he sees screaming ghosts and learns about deceased children, the more he insists on walking slowly down dark hallways in search of something unlikely to complete his assigned task.

Working from Susan Hill's Victorian-era novel, writer Jane Goldman and director James Watkins subscribe to the notion that it's always terrifying for something spooky to appear and then disappear on second glance. Since they also don't think that will be enough to scare anyone who's seen a horror movie before, the generic "Woman in Black" frequently accentuates its brooding, aimless scenes with music that sounds like someone dropped an elephant on a piano.

The film seems to move ploddingly toward depth Radcliffe never conveys and a twist that never comes. In the meantime, Kipps fails to suggest much commitment to his own 4-year-old child (whose mother died during childbirth) by running into a burning building. Or perhaps fire isn't a big deal—considering the guy spends one gloomy day after another surrounded by tales of dead children and the pressure of paperwork, maybe we're supposed to think he's already in hell.

In "Chronicle," Andrew (played by Dane DeHaan) succumbs to his darker nature as his telekinetic powers become stronger.

Dude. What if you could skip rocks ... with your mind?

OK, the setup behind "Chronicle," whose title could pretty much be the title of any movie ever, may sound stupid: Three Seattle teenagers (Michael B. Jordan of "Friday Night Lights," Dane DeHaan, Alex Russell) crawl into a hole in the ground and encounter a bright shiny thing that gives them the ability to move objects through telekinesis.

Their excursions, which begin with minor tasks such as elevating Legos and girls' skirts and escalate to sliding cars and exploding spiders, are captured on the video camera

!!! Chronicle

Andrew (DeHaan) carries around at all times. Obviously this loner, who has an abusive father and terminally ill mother, cares more about establishing a barrier between himself and the rest of the world than recognizing the whole found footage thing could have gone away after "Cloverfield" and no one would have complained.

Though ultimately the conflicted heroes of "Chronicle" must determine what to do with their newfound talents, the movie doesn't get bogged down in Great Power Means Great Responsibility Land. Steve (Jordan) and Matt (Russell) just emphasize not wanting to hurt people. What makes "Chronicle" so breezily entertaining is that these guys talk and act like real teens trying to understand their place in the world after suddenly becoming unthinkably powerful.

Max Landis' script takes too long to establish conflict, but he captures kids pretending to be knowledgeable and adult before realizing they're neither yet. Several audience members in the screening were laughing at moments I didn't find laughable, and afterward I overheard someone remark that "Chronicle" is worse than "Jumper." 1. Not even close to that bad. 2. Just because "Chronicle" features dudes jumping into the sky doesn't mean the movie has that much in common with "Jumper."

By the way, first-time feature director Josh Trank is reportedly the top choice to help Fox reboot the "Fantastic Four" series. Sounds like a plan, considering "Chronicle" is smarter and sleeker than the previous two "FF" movies combined.

Coriolanus

!!! "Go. Get you home. You fragments." Ouch. Those are not the words of a guy who respects the people. In this adaptation of the Shakespeare tragedy, Caius Martius (Ralph Fiennes, who also directed) quickly learns that a leader so uninterested in appealing to the masses has little chance of remaining in power. (Thoughts on that, Occupy movement?) Fiennes lets the pacing sag in the second half while also losing track of Martius' enemy Aufidius (Gerard Butler, above), but that he gets a solid performance out of Butler lessens the wound. The language of "Coriolanus" often is electric, as it should be in a story about a stubborn hero with fierce disdain for empty words.

Quiet, empty hotels are scary

Sara Paxton and Pat Healy in 'The Innkeepers'

FAST PAISED

Matt Pais

The Innkeepers

In a genre of scarily abundant incompetence, few horror movies deliver a triple threat of strong characters, chilly mood and clean storytelling. "The Innkeepers" is one of those few.

The question at hand in writer-director Ti West's follow-up to the promising but flawed "House of the Devil": Is the Yankee Pedlar Inn, set to close after more than 100 years in business, really haunted by a woman who supposedly hanged herself after being left at the altar? Bored hotel employee Clare (Sara Paxton) has nothing to occupy her but this mystery, and her smitten co-worker Luke (Pat Healy) looks like he'll pursue anything if it means partnering up with Clare.

West has neither the budget nor the imagination to deliver new, unforgettable images to make you jump out of your socks; he'd rather tighten the tension and let you wonder if anything's even happening at all. As a former TV star who now sees herself as a healer, Kelly McGillis (yes, of "Top Gun") establishes a crucial, disarming rapport with Paxton, who brings nuance to a woman disappearing into her own terrified curiosity.

"The Innkeepers" is a streamlined genre exercise that's spruced up by better-than-average dialogue, though the movie's likely to frustrate people wanting major freak-out moments. It will, however, satisfy anyone who understands that people often believe what they want to believe, with or without evidence. With all the rumors and unexplainable behavior in the world, West suggests, you could drive yourself crazy.

NEW ON DVD

By Rick Bentley | THE FRESNO BEE
This week's DVD releases include the Blu-ray versions of a film classic, a sci-fi TV series and a dark tale starring Ryan Gosling.

To Kill a Mockingbird

To mark the 50th anniversary of this amazing movie, a commemorative limited edition collector's series Blu-ray combo pack is being released. The digitally remastered and fully restored version offers clearer images, but this film, based on Harper Lee's Pulitzer Prize-winning novel, is already powerful because of the writing and performances. This is one of the finest works by Gregory Peck in a career filled with memorable performances.

Extras: Two-disc set includes featurettes and commentary by director Robert Mulligan and producer Alan Pakula

Star Trek: The Next Generation—The Next Level

Episodes of the '80s-'90s sci-fi TV series are being released in the enhanced Blu-ray format. The initial release includes "Encounter at Farpoint," "Sins of the Father" and "The Inner Light." This upgrade creates images so sharp that the product is far superior to the original.

Extras: Bonus features exploring memorable missions, crew profiles, behind-the-scenes and more

ALSO NEW THIS WEEK

In Time

In a future where people stop aging at 25 but are engineered to live only one more year, Will (Justin Timberlake) tries to buy time.

Extras: Deleted/extended scenes

The Big Year

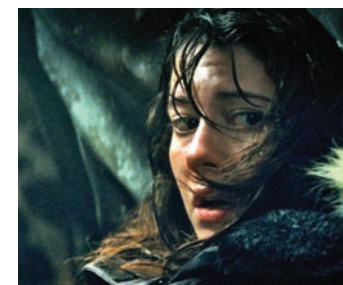

Three avid bird-watchers (Owen Wilson, Jack Black and Steve Martin) compete to spot the rarest birds in North America.

Extras: Extended and theatrical versions

Thunder Soul

Jamie Foxx narrates this documentary about a high school band that becomes a funk phenomenon.

Extras: Filmmakers' commentary, new footage from the 1974 documentary "Prof & The Band"

The Thing

At an Antarctica research site, an alien craft is discovered. This is a prequel to John Carpenter's 1982 cult classic.

Extras: Deleted/extended scenes, two making-of featurettes, commentary tracks.

Dream House

A man (Daniel Craig) and his family relocate to a quaint New England town; they soon learn that a mother and her two children were murdered in the same residence.

Extras: Four behind-the-scenes features

Drive

R

The first half of this film from director Nicolas Winding Refn should be called "Coast." Gosling (left) is a Hollywood stuntman by day and getaway driver by night. When the loner connects with his neighbor (Carey Mulligan), he gets a clue to a past that's turned him into a sociopathic driver. The tedium of the film might have worked if Gosling's character had any life, but Refn's direction is methodical to the point of being pretentious. "Drive" is one of those movies that wraps itself in the art of cinema by cherry-picking the best from genres such as film noir, Sam Peckinpah violence and '70s social rejection. It might have worked in the hands of a better movie mechanic, but Refn's vehicle stalls out.

Extras: Four behind-the-scenes featurettes and an interview with Refn.

Meet the thoroughly modern Natalie Dormer

SHOW PATROL

Curt Wagner

 » @showpatrol

It just doesn't seem right watching Natalie Dormer act in contemporary clothing, let alone with her natural blond hair.

"I do quite a lot contemporary stuff," Dormer told me, laughing, during a phone interview from London, "but the American audience perhaps wouldn't know me so well for that."

What Americans do know the British actress for is her role as the brunette Anne Boleyn in "The Tudors," Showtime's bodice-ripping take of the lives and wives of King Henry VIII. BBC America airs repeats of that series on Wednesdays, but fans can see the modern, blond Dormer in the network's horror-comedy mashup "The Fades," in which she plays Sarah, a ghost-fighting "angelic."

Without spoiling—the network airs the fourth of six episodes at 8 p.m. Saturday (but I recommend you find them and start from the beginning)—Dormer's character is put through the wringer.

"I got a great kick out of this show because it was so physically demanding," Dormer said. "A lot of extreme stuff happens, without giving too much away, we all had ash being blown in our faces or were covered in goo and glue or had to deal with peculiar, extreme physical situations."

MORE FROM DORMER

"It's war ... The battle is on, life and death. The battle is coming, so it's serious now."

—On Season 2 of "Game of Thrones"

"Oh, man, she's a workhorse. She is. That woman obviously doesn't need to sleep. ... She's one of those people who doesn't believe in saying it's not possible."

—On working for Madonna in "W.E.," in which she plays the young Queen Mother

Dormer dons period costumes again for her role in Season 2 of HBO's fantasy hit "Game of Thrones," which begins April 1. She finished filming in December but did not want to reveal much about her character, Margaery Tyrell. Like Sarah in "The Fades," practically anything you say about Margaery is a spoiler.

But I think it's safe to reveal Margaery is the sister of the Knight of Flowers, who after much drama marries a contender to the Iron Throne. And Dormer did say she's signed on to the show for multiple seasons. "Absolutely. Margaery really comes into her own in series [seasons] 3 and 4."

While you wait for "Thrones" to return, you can see Dormer in the Madonna-directed film "W.E.," which opens Feb. 10 in Chicago, and in modern clothes—and goo—in "The Fades."

Decadent Gold Coast spots tackle weekend mornings

By Lisa Arnett
REDEYE

It's raining bloody marys in the Gold Coast thanks to two new weekend brunches.

Bistronomic (840 N. Wabash Ave. 312-944-8400), a polished little French bistro just off the Viagra Triangle, kicked off 2012 with the debut of its weekend brunch menu. A bit further north, the spacious, stunning revamp of the longtime supper-club classic the Pump Room (1301 N. State Parkway 312-787-3700) also is trying its hand at brunch. We spent a weekend gorging in the Gold Coast to size both of them up.

Crowd surfing

Bistronomic: Chatty duos of girlfriends, a few gray hairs and families with babies in tow.

The Pump Room: Couples young and old checking out of the Public Hotel, big dressed-up groups and families with babies in tow.

Chef sightings

Bistronomic: Chef Martial Noguier makes the rounds to ask (in his French accent) if your table is "having a good time?" Why yes, thanks to those bottomless mimosas, we sure are!

Pump Room: I didn't spot executive chef Bradford Phillips (who cooked at LM prior to this gig), because he probably was hard at work in the kitchen. Big-name chef Jean-Georges Vongerichten (who created the "overall food concept and menu," the menu states) probably was in New York.

Something sweet

Bistronomic: Basic brioche French toast ($11) feels indulgent thanks to creme brulee batter, orange slices and Grand Marnier syrup. On the sweet-and-salty side, there's a Belgian waffle with bacon and an egg ($10).

Pump Room: The massively thick challah French toast ($12) with a chestnut-brown, crunchy outside and soft, flavorless inside brought back memories of cafeteria French toast sticks, though more prettily presented with crispy bacon and a few bites of roasted apple. Other sweet options include doughnut holes with spiced vanilla custard sauce for dipping ($8) and a small sticky bun with cream cheese frosting ($5), both perfectly passable but nothing special.

Good eggs

Bistronomic: An innocuous-sounding mushroom omelet ($12) is made memorable with a drizzle of mushroom-red wine sauce and fingerling potatoes cooked in duck fat.

Pump Room: The sunnyside-up frittata isn't actually a frittata at all; it's two conjoined sunnyside-up eggs scattered with bacon, dill, shards of asparagus, tiny croutons and red chili slivers that deliver a zingy morning wakeup call. It's definitely one of the most unique brunch dishes I've tried, but not especially filling for $14.

Day drinking

Bistronomic: Cocktails are limited to the traditional bloody marys and mimosas (both $8), though they'll keep refilling your glass of the latter for $15 per person.

Pump Room: The cocktail menu looked to be the same one offered at dinner, with the most morning-worthy pick being a seasonal fruit bellini ($14), but everyone in the dining room was drinking the bloody marys ($10). My brunch pal/bloody mary connoisseur announced it as being her favorite in recent memory, despite the wimpy garnish (a single celery stalk).

Can't stop thinking about ...

Bistronomic: The croque madame ($14), which can only be described as rich. Filthy, filthy rich. You don't have to care about the names of the artisan producers of the ham (Nueske's, with slices stacked a half-inch high) or the cheese (Pleasant Ridge Reserve from Uplands Cheese Company, mind-blowingly buttery) to appreciate the decadence of this egg-topped sandwich. The fries (like the potatoes, they're cooked in duck fat) on the side nearly send me into a blissful food coma.

Sticky bun at Pump Room

Pump Room: The fact that I didn't order the croque madame ($12). Both diners at the table of two next to me did, and I couldn't help but be jealous of the sunnyside-up quail eggs atop each half of their sandwiches.

Know before you go

Bistronomic: Weekend brunch is served from 10 a.m.-2:30 p.m. Saturdays and Sundays. Unless you have a big group, you probably don't need a reservation.

Pump Room: Weekend brunch is served from 10 a.m.-3 p.m. Saturdays and Sundays. A number of tables are prioritized for hotel guests, so reservations are recommended.

BOTTOM LINE

Though the Pump Room's simple menu descriptions often undersell (it'd be nice to know the French toast comes with bacon), it's a fairly good brunch in a stunning setting. Bistronomic serves an indulgent brunch in a nice-enough setting. LMARNETT@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEEATS

THE CLASH

DEBATING WHATEVER TIMELY MUSICAL QUESTION STRIKES A CHORD

The setup: Guns N' Roses—which for the past several years has been Axl Rose and a bunch of random no-names—has announced a handful of club dates, including Feb. 19 at House of Blues (tickets on sale at 10 a.m. Friday).

The debate: Is that an awesome opportunity to see a huge band in a small place, or a lame effort for a has-been to attract concertgoers to a space that's easier to fill (with fewer potential boos when Rose inevitably goes on hours late)?

COOL

 BRMOORE@TRIBUNE.COM
 @REDEYESPORTSGUY

VS

LAME

Matt Pais
 MPAS@TRIBUNE.COM
 @MATTPAIS

Guns N' Roses might not be the rock behemoth they once were, but the unpredictable band led by enigmatic frontman Axl Rose is still larger than life. It's been years since the band rocked club-size venues, so the show at House of Blues should be on your "must-see" list. Besides hearing classics like "Welcome to the Jungle," "November Rain" and "Civil War," you never know what's going to happen at a GNR show—a riot, a headline-grabbing Rose meltdown or one of the most badass shows you've ever seen.

Wow, $125 is chump change for the chance to get up close and personal with a guitar god like Slash. Oh, right, Slash and Axl haven't been BFFs (or performed together) for years, and Axl's legend comes with an asterisk of his reputation for performances that disrespect audiences in any number of ways. Many would love to hear those first few moments of "Sweet Child O' Mine" or "Paradise City," close their eyes and imagine the legit Guns N' Roses in front of them. And imagine is exactly what concertgoers will have to do, since the pricey House of Blues show is more like Axl and the Axles than a stage full of rock icons.

LAST WEEK'S WINNER: IS IT OK TO SKIP THE OPENING BANDS AND JUST SHOW UP FOR THE HEADLINER?

THREE TO PLAY

BY RYAN SMITH, FOR REDEYE

Trine 2

$14.99 at Xbox Live Arcade, PlayStation Network

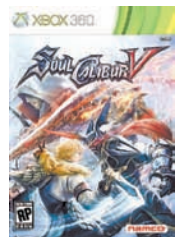

Even though it's a budget-priced, downloadable title, "Trine 2" delivers more thrills than most games that cost four times the asking price. As part puzzle-based platformer and part action game, "Trine 2" lets you switch between wizard, thief and warrior characters and use their unique powers and abilities to navigate a gorgeously designed fantasy world that feels like part of a magical fairy tale.

Final Fantasy XIII-2

Xbox 360, PlayStation 3

A new breed of darker, more action-packed role-playing games have led many gamers away from the slow-paced, menu-driven "Boy and ragtag band of warriors grow up and fight the ultimate bad guy" tropes that have defined the long-running "Final Fantasy" series. But "FF's" developers seem to have taken the deserved criticisms directed at the previous game to heart—and made plenty of improvements, including more side quests, exploration and mini-games. For those who want something more narrative-driven than "Skyrim," "Final Fantasy XIII-2" is worth a serious look.

Soulcalibur V

Xbox 360, PlayStation 3

Like its predecessors, "Soulcalibur V" is a great looking one-on-one 3-D fighter that differentiates itself because the characters wield signature weapons such as Nightmare's comically enormous broadsword. After playing through the compelling story mode found in last year's "Mortal Kombat," the single-player story in "Soulcalibur V" is a disappointment. But if you play fighting games for the competition against your friends or random strangers online, it might be time to pick up your sword, staff or nunchuks again. RYAN SMITH IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

10 reasons glasses are sexy

The Date Report

1. It's fun to try and see if you can fog them up, like in cartoons.

2. Fights are more fun/dramatic when lovers whip their glasses off in anger.

3. When you have sex, you don't have to feel self-conscious about your body because they probably can't see too well without their glasses.

4. There is something charmingly, unwittingly sexy about someone who takes off their glasses and rubs the bridge of their nose while thinking.

5 Sometimes you can judge someone's personality on the frames. (Thick, black lenses = hipster, small wire frames = sweetly nerdy, colored plastic lenses = creative.)

6. They may be dumb as a brick, but at least they don't look it.

7. That moment when you reach up and take someone's glasses off.

8. Likewise reaching for your glasses and squintingly slipping them on in the morning.

9. Glasses are great for dating: no asking a person for contact solution or keeping your contacts in glasses of water during unexpected hookups.

10 The whole Clark Kent/sexy librarian fantasy thing.

Kate Hudson's gonna be a badass ... really?

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

When we think Kate Hudson, a hippie groupie, a scheming lady mag writer and a calculating bride come to mind. But an action thriller heroine? Well, we'll see. She'll kick butt and defend herself against hit men in "Everly," thr.com reports, a beat-em-up flick that takes place IN ONE ROOM THE ENTIRE TIME. While you're trying to figure out how that's gonna work, check out where Kate falls on our butt-kicking spectrum of Hollywood women, based solely on their past roles.

Rachel McAdams

Ooooo, help me, Channing Tatum/Owen Wilson/Ryan Gosling/Eric Bana! When Rachel isn't a damsel in distress, she's playing a Mean Girl. Which might have some fierce potential, but we've yet to see it.

Kate Hudson

We got excited when we saw "The Killer Inside Me" on her resume, then realized she was dating the killer. Boo! Now who's ready to settle in for a double-feature of "Fool's Gold" and "You, Me and Dupree"? Guys?

Gina Carano

Don't recognize this name? You will soon: This former MMA fighter and American Gladiator is making a name for herself in "Haywire." Heroines who actually look like they can beat somebody up? Welcome to 2012.

Angelina Jolie

Things Angelina Jolie does well: wear a lot of leather, shoot things, jump off stuff and not break her legs, squint menacingly. The closest we've ever seen her come to soft and romantic is "Mr. and Mrs. Smith," and we all know she was in the midst of a husband theft there anyway.

Jennifer Garner

Don't be fooled by "13 Going on 30." Remember, this tough chick also starred in "Alias" and "Daredevil." Lesson: She knows how to use a lot of pointy weapons.

Jennifer Lopez

We almost thought her sexy U.S. marshal antics in "Out of Sight" earned her badass points for life—then we remembered "The Back-up Plan." Ohhh no.

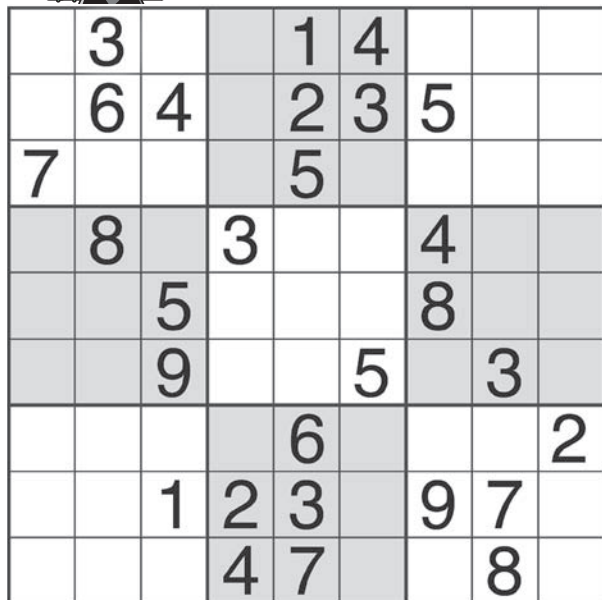

Katherine Heigl

Oh, Hollywood. Did you really think "One for the Money" would make us forget about the queen of rom-coms' rom-comminess? We'll pretend like it was a nice try.

Zoey Deschanel

The only butt she's kicking is Joseph Gordon-Levitt's in "[500] Days of Summer." Otherwise, she couldn't hurt a bunny.

Future shock?

Hey Doc, how's your singing voice? "Back to the Future," the 1985 classic, may be the next movie property to get the Broadway musical treatment, deadline.com reports. Director Robert Zemeckis is said to be in early talks exploring a transfer to the stage. Certainly "Spider-Man" offers a cautionary tale.

Madonna
US PRESSWIRE

PROUD TO BE PRICEY

Start pinching pennies and don't pop for Prada—Madonna says she's worth the contents of a purse. The Super Bowl halftime headliner told Newsweek that $300 for tickets to her show is worth putting a dent in your paycheck, according to nme.com. "Work all year, scrape the money together and come to my show," she said. "I'm worth it."

TOP CHEF

Hungry for more?

"Top Chef" is going to reach double digits. Bravo has renewed the series for a 10th season, deadline.com reports. Open casting calls for the next season begin Feb. 21.

Whoops!

In a case of unfortunate timing, the British edition of InStyle magazine is just now publishing a pre-breakup interview with Heidi Klum. In it, Klum, who announced last month that she and husband Seal were separating, says, "I'm determined to mark our wedding every year with a really great party."

HOT DATE

MARCH 27

That's when Macy Gray's new album, "Covered," will drop, billboard.com reports. In it, Gray will cover songs by Kanye West, Metallica, Radiohead and Arcade Fire, to name a few.

Gossip-free girl

Blake Lively—the commitment type? That's what she seems to have revealed as Elle magazine's March cover girl, eonline.com reports. She tells the mag she's only had four boyfriends EVER, and "I've never been with anyone that's not a boyfriend." So we guess current squeeze Ryan Reynolds better tell her his list now to keep things fair.
